Insect of the Quarter:

Stored Product Pests

- Webbing (spider like) in food or on pantry ceiling
- Pest skins (cocoon) on ceiling
- Moths or beetles flying around

Four of the A-All wildlife control technicians attended a two day basic certification in wildlife control class at a national conference in Mississippi this February.

To take two days out during our busy time of year to attend a course to improve our knowledge to better serve our customers worked out. All the technicians passed the course and we were able to catch up on our work when we got back to Dallas.

This is not the first time our technicians have taken a detailed course. Most of our termite technicians have attended a two day hands on course at Texas A&M on termite control.

Our pest control technicians have attended basic classes in pesticide regulations, pesticides, safety, entomology, insect identification, and a variety of other subjects.

Wildlife control technicians have to learn about a variety of vertebrate pests. They have to identify the problem not by a specimen like we do with an insect body but by looking at the size of the holes the animal gnawed or the droppings (scat) left behind or the time the noises are being heard.

Over the years I have had many customers like the fact that we can take care of their insect problems as well as animal problems.

On the national level it seems that the wildlife control owner operators do not want to do pest control and sometimes the pest control operators do not want to do wildlife control.

We have adjusted to doing a little of everything. This makes life interesting for the technician. One day they could be on a roof closing up holes and the next day they could be under the house treating for termites.

In my case, I have had formal training in pest control at Purdue University. I learned a lot and I know this knowledge has made this company better. However, I am amazed at the amount of knowledge I have gained by working in the field. - David

Stored Product Pests

Last year at this time I was talking about spring cleaning so it is that time of year again. There are beetles and moths that are related to damaged clothes but there are also moths and beetles related to food.

Sanitation is very important in the process of dealing with both of these problems, but lets focus on spring cleaning for stored product pests.

You need to get a good flashlight and go through your pantry looking for problems. You will need to pull out any products that are too old and just throw them away. Sometimes this can be a hard decision, but really it is for the best. Before you toss an old box open it to see if you see signs of cobwebs in the box. This is a sign that you may have an infestation in this box. Of course if you see beetles, their skins, moths or any skins at the ceiling in the pantry this also alerts you to the fact that you may have an active infestation.

A-All in the Family

Patrick Fincannon
Future President

Patrick joined the team at A-All Pest Termite Exterminators at the end of last year and if he has helped service your home you may recognize the fact he is truly part of the family. He is David and Ann's son. Patrick has worked some summers in the past for us and is excited about working with the family company. He attended the wildlife course with the other technicians in February and is eager to perform more animal control.
